Electronic submissions are preferred. Preferred formats for articles, stories or advertisements are Microsoft Word or RTF (rich text format). An MS-Word template is available at www.illinoischess.org/icb.htm.

Game submissions are also preferred in electronic format. Games should be submitted in ChessBase archive format (.cbv) or in pgn. ChessBase 8 will automatically send archive format if you e-mail from ChessBase 8. In earlier versions of ChessBase you may archive a database to create a single file to e-mail. See your help materials.

Most chess databases will also produce text files in pgn format, as will many chess playing programs. If you need a simple program to create pgn files, we recommend the freeware PGN Viewer by KenChess, available at www.illinoischess.org/icb.htm. ### Winding Down

Well, by the time you read this, the Illinois Open will be over, and we will be preparing to wind down the remaining time for our term in office. We have tried to focus on several key points that have the general theme of focusing on basics. Our goal has been to improve the infrastructure of ICA, to increase its appeal throughout Illinois, and to build our core of volunteers.

This is important for several reasons. It provides a more efficient way of organizing and promoting tournaments, and since USCF is still working to resolve its difficulties, strong state associations may some day be necessary if those difficulties prove to formidable. We hope that players and chess clubs throughout Illinois will work to support ICA.

ICA Elections

Depending on whether elections for new officers are contested or not, you will receive either a mail ballot or a ballot in your next ICB. Right now, very few people have declared their intention to run for ICA office. We hope that some volunteers will step forward soon and submit petitions for nomination.

Illinois Class

One of the major tournaments coming up this fall is the Illinois Class. One of our top organizers, Fred Gruenberg, has agreed to help organize this tournament this year. Please look elsewhere in this issue for details, and please support this tournament!

A note from Tim Just

From the ICA constitution:
Section 5. Nominations. Nominations for officers shall be submitted to the Secretary in writing not later than October 1 of an election year.

Nominations must include the signatures of 10 association members as well as the nominee's permission.

Illinois had 29 votes total (1 bad ballot).

Bachler	23
Just	22
J Warren	17
Losoff	16
Fineberg	15
L Cohen	14
Scott	13

Because these were all people that said they would attend they got the delegate nod over Smythe (21), Brock (19), Chow (17), etc.. Wayne even got 9 votes

This letter was in reference to the Unknown Picture in the Richard Verber Part II Article.

Dear ICB,

Yes, I was a regular visitor of the Chicago Chess Club in 1963-64, and then 1966-1970. Richard and I were good friends. He was always available to talk about chess, look at games, and had strong intellectual interests, as well as a curiosity about Psychiatry.

In those years, before the ravages of his illness, the Diabetes Mellitus, he was often well dressed in a conservative sense. As the picture reveals, clearly he was feigning indifference, while taking in my profound tactics vs Leopoldi!([Joke])

I will miss him, as we all do.

Al Chow submitted this game and the ones that follow, for the ICA Readers. This game should give all chess players hope. If you would like to have a game published in the ICB. Please submit you games to.

From a Fresh Start to a New Dawn Part II

By GM Yasser Seirawan

Editors of chess magazines and websites may reproduce my account in full or in part, subject to giving a credit to the Chess Café website.

Editor Note: Thank you Chess Café website

The meeting on April 10th at Schiphol Airport, Amsterdam between Carsten Hensel, Steve Timmins, Malcolm Pein and me was a chessic Waterloo. The confidence that I carried for the “Fresh Start” proposals was shattered. Carsten explained that Vladimir Kramnik could not possibly agree to being seeded into a round of quarter-final matches. Kramnik was bound by his contract with Einstein TV, purchased from the Brain Games Network, and was absolutely obliged to play a world championship match against the winner of the Dortmund Candidates’ tournament. Following that match, if he was successful, he was allowed under the Einstein TV contract to play another, voluntary world championship match.

Thus for a first cycle, the maximum number of matches that Kramnik could play would be two. Full stop. Furthermore, the contract allowed a similar provision for a second cycle; he was obliged to play against the winner of a qualifying event in a world championship match, with the possibility, once again, of a voluntary defense too. Naturally, the contract was based on the eventuality of Kramnik winning these matches. Should he be defeated, the contract would become void. Kramnik’s financial guarantees for these matches were substantial, and it was clear that no one would voluntarily give up such an agreeable position.

This news came as quite a blow to me. My discussions with Steve had indicated flexibility in Kramnik’s position, but what Carsten stated made it very clear that Kramnik’s position was completely fixed. I joked that we had all made the trip in vain. What would we do now? Indeed, we had reached an impasse.

I explained that the world would not just idly wait for the Dortmund winner and Kramnik to play a match. Rather, what had already been achieved at that time was partial unity. FIDE, Kasparov and the proposed Commissioners were all prepared to back the “Fresh Start” proposals, and these would probably just go ahead sans Kramnik. Everyone would prefer complete unity, but in the absence of Kramnik’s participation, partial unity was, regrettably, the only option for reviving a Classical Chess championship cycle.

Steve responded that this would be a “nightmare scenario” for Einstein TV. He asked if I was absolutely sure that FIDE favored “A Fresh Start”. I said I was and that FIDE would issue a press release shortly, announcing that it too wanted unity within a fair, inclusive plan. There were doubts expressed that FIDE would make such a statement, but I reassured everyone that this was indeed the case.

At this point Carsten offered a proposal: Why not have Ponomarev play a match against Kasparov and the two match-winners play a match with one another for the undisputed world championship?

Carsten explained that he would have to clear this proposal with Kramnik but that he felt it was the best way to reach complete unity. Steve and Malcolm were very pleased with this suggestion and promised their full support.

I wasn’t happy to have “A Fresh Start” go up in smoke. Over a year of careful consideration had gone into my proposals. For instance, every time Garry had suggested a change to me, no matter how small, I would respond with an avalanche of arguments to justify what I had put in “A Fresh Start”. So much so that it became a standing joke between Garry and me that “A Fresh Start”, or “Seirawan’s Defense” as Garry started calling it, was inviolate.

Now, in a stroke, “A Fresh Start” was out the window. What about the world qualification tournament in the first cycle? What about Anand and Ivanchuk, two players who had honored their obligations to FIDE? They had declined their invitations to play in Dortmund, and the solution Carsten was putting forward would mean that they would be out of the cycle. I felt heartbroken.

We spoke about this new proposal at great length, and I was cautious. We also discussed the second cycle, i.e. the fact that the defending champion would have to defend his title twice, and then thrice for the third cycle. These were tough concessions, but they were agreed. I needed something for FIDE to show that the players were willing to make chess and the new World Classical Chess Championship cycle more of a sport and not just protect the privileged rights of the defending champion.

Reactions

My train and tram ride back to my Amsterdam apartment was an unhappy one. My brain hurt. The meeting lasted until the middle of the afternoon but Carsten and I had spoken together until nearly 7 PM.

As I had arrived at Schiphol at around 11 AM all the conversations had left me drained. It had been a very tough meeting. I desperately wanted complete unity for the greatest good of chess, but there was no way to get "A Fresh Start" involved for the first cycle. By the time I arrived home I was quite depressed and fleetingly considered just forgetting what had taken place. But as an honest broker, I had to deliver this new proposal to the others. How would everyone react?

Upon seeing me, Yvette immediately realized that something had gone terribly wrong. I was in a bad mood, and she had the good sense to let me brood while making us a good dinner. Out of frustration I bashed out an e-mail to Steve, Carsten and Malcolm and felt better for it. (The next day I would sheepishly withdraw my message.)

April 11th was telephone day. I wanted to make contact with all the proposed Commissioners to explain the new proposal. In the case of Bessel this was bad timing; he was deeply involved in meetings on the privatization of Czech Telecom and was unreachable. I spoke with his right-hand man, Serge Grimaux. Serge was a good listener, and his responses were surprising and reassuring. To paraphrase: "Look, Yasser, you've done your best and even if this solution isn't what you wanted, it gets us to chess unity. I don't see the problem. That was your goal and you've achieved it, be happy! You chess players are so brilliant, you figure out what will make everybody happy, but stop for a moment. This is the real world. Think about the costs of a world qualification tournament, all those elimination matches and finally a unifying match! This new proposal is financially much easier for everyone. The players don't lose anything. The next FIDE championship begins in December 2003, and in the meantime, we get a chance to resolve the current mess. Really this is OK. It gives us time to build up the infrastructure, create a business plan and raise sponsor dollars. We need time to market these matches. Bessel is a businessman. He will support this counter-proposal."

Erik Anderson had a similar view. Complete unity was our goal and he didn't like partial unity. Erik thought the two-match proposal to be a reasonable compromise. Dato Tan Chin Nam was traveling, and I sent him updates by e-mail.

It was time to talk with Garry. He was agreeable but wanted to know about the draw-odds situation for both matches. I explained that they would be abolished for all cycles that fell under the Commissioners' purview. For sporting purposes, the public of today would insist on a tiebreaker. Garry agreed that this solution, while favoring him for the current cycle, would also be the fairest way to determine ties in future cycles.

We needed to know FIDE's reaction. Kirsan was disappointed with the new proposal. He liked "A Fresh Start", as he saw it as inclusive and fair. He understood that this, the first cycle, was a mess but he had a major concern: Anand and Ivanchuk had to be included in the Dortmund tournament. That way, at least the 12 highest-rated players in the world would be competing in the first cycle. Discussions then focused on possible financial support to Dortmund to make the inclusion of Anand and Ivanchuk possible. I would have to go back to Carsten and Steve and see if it could be done.

Einstein TV's Position

The next day, Friday, April 12th, I received the following e-mail message from Malcolm, which he distributed to Serge Grimaux, Steve Timmins, Carsten Hensel and Owen Williams (Kasparov's agent) and in which he summarized Einstein TV's position:

From: MALCOLMPEIN
Sent: Friday, April 12, 2002 10:32 AM
Subject: Einstein's position (post lunch)

Dear Yasser,

I was surprised and delighted when at our meeting on Wednesday in Amsterdam, Kramnik's representative presented a potentially workable and inclusive alternative to Fresh Start that could lead to unification. At this juncture I would like to summarise Einstein's position.

Einstein favour the proposed compromise with matches between Ponomarev v Kasparov & Kramnik v Dortmund qualifier and then the winners of those matches to play in Autumn 2003. This produces a Universally Recognised World Champion faster than we could have hoped for, which is to everyone's benefit and even quicker than under the original Fresh Start proposal.

We also would like to see a new WCA with Commissioners as envisaged and a committee of players that would advise on the structure of the 2nd cycle and the match between the winners of the above.

The 'cycle' above includes most of the key players bar Anand and is as inclusive as it possibly could be at this stage unless someone drops out. The 2nd cycle will hopefully be even more inclusive.

We view unification as vital to the chess world and commercially to our advantage. We are working on the basis that we will have continuing rights, particularly in the field of broadcast and would welcome any information on how these will be enshrined in the new organisation.

We are looking forward to meeting everyone in Prague.

Kind regards

Malcolm Pein

(Einstein Chess Advisor)

The Commissioners accepted that this message was a confirmation of a firm offer from Kramnik's side that this was the course that would make complete unity possible. With the die cast, attention now turned to creating the proper structures to support a new Classical Chess cycle. Folks got busy on this part of the enterprise. There was a lot of work to do.

I responded to Malcolm's message that the commercial rights were outside of my authority (come to think about it, did I have any authority?) but that these rights could certainly be negotiated in a unity agreement in Prague. Einstein TV was clearly part and parcel of any unity plan and its position had to be respected. Besides, Einstein TV would make a great partner for guaranteeing video and television coverage!

Anand

A key player in Einstein/Kramnik's new unity proposal was Viswanathan Anand, the third highest rated player in the world and a former FIDE Champion. It would be dreadful to launch a unification cycle without his participation. There were two possible solutions: Compensate the wild-card seed, Christopher Lutz, and replace him by Anand, or expand the eight-player field in Dortmund to ten players and include both Anand and Ivanchuk.

This was the moment for me that my work stopped being fun.

I empathized with Christopher, considering how he would feel if he was asked to step down. Even with cash as compensation, would he have such an opportunity again? Furthermore, such a sudden change of players would significantly upset the average strength in each of the four-player groups. There would likely have to be a reshuffling of the players, causing them major disruption in their preparations.

Expanding the groups from four players to five would be a very tough challenge to the players. With only four players in the groups, the top two from each group were to qualify for match play. With five players, only the winner from each group would go forward to a match for the right to face Kramnik. This change of format would be necessary if ten players competed, because of the need to accommodate the Dortmund tournament venue schedule. Such a dramatic change in the format was sure to cause the players a great deal of angst. There was no easy solution. I supported a ten-player field and wanted to get additional funding for their inclusion, but Bessel would be tied up in Czech Telecom discussions for a week to come. Did I mention that this was a two billion dollar deal? Some people have strange priorities. I'd have to wait.

On April 19th, FIDE released a statement dated April 17th announcing that the FIDE President would travel to Prague and attend the meeting in a spirit of compromise and to reach unity. This caused yet another dramatic leap in my telephone and e-mail box usage. Yvette was becoming seriously annoyed; she was losing her husband, and I found myself staying up quite late every night.

The days leading up to Prague went by surprisingly quickly. The major bones of contention had boiled down to the issues of how to resolve the situation with Anand and Ivanchuk. Would the replacement of Lutz be the best and least disruptive solution, or should Anand and Ivanchuk be added to Dortmund? The discussions were heated.

One day, Malcolm explained that contact had been made with Anand through a third party, and the feedback was that he didn't want to play in Dortmund.

I responded that I would prefer to speak with Anand directly in Prague and make certain that he understood that he would be declining an invitation to a tournament that would be sanctioned by FIDE as an official qualifier. As Prague was only a week or two away, everything would be settled there. I asked Carsten and Steve just to keep open the possibility that one or both of Ivanchuk and Anand might be included. If Malcolm was right and Anand didn't want to play, things could be left alone. I just wanted to be absolutely certain that Anand would be making an informed choice.

I considered calling Anand and speaking directly with him myself but decided not to. Delivering a message over the phone, rather than in person, has a decidedly different effect, especially on a matter of such great importance. Anand would have every reason to be skeptical that such progress had been made. In Prague, he would get the straight scoop; everyone would be there, including the FIDE President, and he would hear it directly that Dortmund would become an official qualifier in a unity cycle. Comparing a phone call from me with the array of persons who would be in Prague made my decision clear: I'd speak with Anand, face to face, in Prague.

To sum things up, the first cycle proposals for "A Fresh Start" were out, and the matches were agreed upon as the plan that would lead to complete unity. The issues being thrashed out were the draw-odds, still a particularly contentious issue, and the potential seeding of Anand and Ivanchuk. I thought that everyone was fully focused on these points.

New Upset

On April 14th a new concern was thrust into public view. The FIDE Rapid Chess Grand Prix had just been completed, and it was reported that a crisis had erupted on the eve of that event. Apparently, Peter Leko, a client of Carsten Hensel (small world), had traveled to Dubai with a signed contract guaranteeing him that the prize fund would be $500,000 USD. I had read the announcements on the FIDE website promising $120,000 USD and was surprised by an angry letter from Alexey Shirov published on the TWIC website protesting about the prize fund. Apparently, Kirsan Ilyumzhinov had flown to Dubai to make what he thought would be the opening ceremonial move and let the event get underway, only to be confronted with a confused situation. On the spot, Kirsan had dug into his pocket for an extra $120,000 USD, upping the prize fund to $240,000 USD and the tournament took place. Leko, the player promised a half a million-dollar prize fund, was the winner...

I called Garry to speak about this, and we had a surprising call together. Since Kirsan had acted in such exemplary fashion regarding chess unity, we both felt great sympathy and sadness for his situation. FIDE Commerce and the Octagon Group had handled all the details and arrangements for these events, and Kirsan, completely unaware of the details, had literally stepped into a mess. Solving it in the style that he did was a magnificent gesture.

For me the Dubai episode reinforced my strong belief in the need for a Chess Commissioners' Office where the legal agreements would be clear and transparent. I also recalled the aborted Kasparov v Shirov match of a few years ago. These things just can't be allowed to happen in the future!

On Sunday, April 21st, I called and spoke with Steve. He was in fine spirits, looking forward to Prague and happy to support the new proposal of the two matches. "A Fresh Start" had become ancient history. We knew the outstanding issues and both felt that accommodation could be reached for Anand and Ivanchuk if they wished to participate. The following Tuesday Yvette and I set off to Prague in high spirits. I was confident about the future cycles, concerned about the draw-odds for the first cycle and expectant that Bessel and the other proposed Commissioners could find financial support for the Dortmund tournament and the placement of the two players.

Prague

Prague is a beautiful city, which is becoming prettier by the day. Since the velvet revolution, it has had a complete facelift, and each return has made me marvel at the construction and progress being made. The peace conference would bring new meaning to the term "Prague Spring." Yvette and I had arrived early for the tournament as she was a member of the organizational staff, and I had been relishing our early arrival as an opportunity to speak with Bessel and Serge. We were all looking forward to coming events when Bessel surprised me with a strong cautionary note that something could easily go wrong. "Listen to an old fox, Yasser. We haven't achieved an agreement yet." Even so, Bessel was in a good mood, and when Serge showed me the playing hall I was blown over. The Žofín Palace was simply a stunning setting, boasting a magnificent playing hall. I was determined to do my best in the tournament!

On Thursday, April 25th, sometime in the early afternoon, Garry phoned my room with a simple message, "Let's walk." There was a strange tone in his voice. I knew something was wrong, but was completely clueless as to what it might be. We started our walk, and I realized that Garry was doing his best not to explode. "Did you read the London Einstein statement?" "Huh? What London Einstein statement?"

Garry then proceeded to floor me with the news of the Einstein TV plan for unification. A plan that would have Ivanchuk and Anand play a match, the winner to play with Kasparov and the winner to play with Ponomarev ceding draw-odds to the defending champion. I was absolutely staggered. The announcement and its plan had never been discussed with me by anyone. It violated our blackout rule and made all the work of the previous two months seem pointless. Garry was terribly upset, and I couldn't blame him. "Do Einstein and Kramnik want unity or to play games? I came here to Prague to help their tournament, help the players and now this! They make an offer, we accept and they take it back. They violate the rules of no announcements, and now FIDE will be upset. Where is the goodwill?" I felt like a complete dope. Garry vented for a few miles, and after our walk I rushed to Serge's offices for an Internet connection to read the London announcement. When I met Serge and Bessel later that evening for a few drinks, the mood was decidedly somber.

Bessel got me with the old, "I told you so," and then we discussed what to do. It was at this point that Bessel made one of the many tough calls that he would make in Prague with the unity effort: "We have to treat the announcement as a trial balloon and proceed on the basis that we have an agreement that we are all willing to support." Answering the London statement with one from the proposed Commissioners didn't seem viable. Bessel didn't want to get caught in a tit-for-tat open exchange with the media. A blanket rejection would push Kramnik away and might offend Madame Nahed Ojeh, who was clearly trying her best to support the unity effort. How would FIDE feel? The officials at FIDE were going to be angry as they had never been consulted about a new proposal and this one directly told FIDE what it should do to manage its side. We decided that we should all get a good night's sleep and concentrate on the tournament. Things would calm down.

As for me, a good night's sleep sounded like a great idea, but sleep wouldn't come. Mentally, I kept re-reading the Einstein TV proposal. A good deal of work had gone into its creation. How long had that process been going on? Days, perhaps weeks? Didn't I just speak with Steve on Sunday and get reassured that everything was fine? I had trusted Steve and felt a very good bond with him. Back on March 15th Steve had been the hero very much responsible for saving the day and bringing us to Prague. Why throw this spanner in the works so shortly before our conference?

There had to be a reasonable explanation, and I felt sure that the current unrest would blow over. When Steve and Carsten arrived in Prague, we would have a good chat together.

Players Arrive

By Friday, April 26th, most of the players had arrived for the Eurotel tournament. They were very keen to discuss the unity efforts, and the bar of the SAS Radisson Hotel became a regular meeting place where groups formed. The London unity plan received a great deal of attention; with Madame Nahed Ojeh guaranteeing her financial support, the players realized that at long last unity was a very serious possibility. The excitement was palpable.

I had a number of discussions with my old friend Arthur Yusupov. He explained to me that before arriving in Prague he had been very pessimistic about unity, but now, especially after reading Einstein TV's plan, he had flipped and was very optimistic! I responded that before I came to Prague I had been very optimistic but that especially after reading the Einstein TV plan I had become very pessimistic! We spent a long time playing catch-up. I'm not sure, but after our discussions Arthur may have joined me in the pessimists' camp.

There was still the outstanding issue of how to respond to the Einstein TV plan. Garry wanted a press release to go out immediately. Bessel was in a very tough position. His own press release the month before had stated that he wouldn't be making any further public comments. Damned if you do and damned if you don't. In the end, he didn't make any further public comments, but it remained a constant source of irritation throughout. I think that in the end Bessel made the right decision. FIDE officials would have every reason to be upset by being blind-sided with a new proposal. Previously they had concentrated upon "Fresh Start" and had been considering a new two-match proposal.

Opening Ceremony

The opening ceremony for the Eurotel tournament was a joy. The Žofín Palace hosted a packed house to witness the First Lady of the Czech Republic, Mrs. Havel, officially opening the Eurotel tournament. For the drawing of lots two fencers dressed in Black and White faced off. Kasparov selected the White fighter, who won a well-fought duel. Garry chose White in his first game against his first-round opponent, Gilberto Milos. The players quickly calculated their own colors. I would have Black in my first game with Boris Gelfand.

Afterwards, by happenstance, I took my dinner back at the hotel and I was eating alone as Yvette would be busy with last-minute tournament details. Vishy Anand and his wife Aruna were having dinner, and I joined them. It was a very enjoyable conversation, and I found myself admiring Vishy and his princely statesmanship yet again.

I gave Vishy a data-dump of all the events that had come to pass, so that he was completely up-to-date on the situation. He was impressed by the effort that had been made and was now fully aware of how serious everyone was. We then spoke about his status. Vishy's view was very clear: he had declined Dortmund and didn't want to play there, even in the obviously changed circumstances. Full stop. He considered his position in the chess world not to be so different from Kasparov's. Okay, a bit less, but why should he have to play in a qualifier event? He was a former World Champion and felt that he should be treated more respectfully. His major point, and he made it repeatedly, was that unity was an absolute necessity for chess, that this had to come first. That he would not be involved in this first cycle but would rather take his chances in the second cycle.

Vishy put the situation in dramatic fashion; if it had not been for one lost game with White in the FIDE semi-final with Ivanchuk he could have been in the FIDE final championship match and we might be talking an entirely different story. He had his chance and would participate in a second cycle, provided that it was fair.

I explained to Vishy the loose details of the second cycle: a world qualifier, five players advancing to the Candidates' matches, to be joined by the highest-rated player who was not the defending champion. These six masters would play eight-game Candidates' matches; the defending champion would join the three winners and play 12-game matches, and the championship would be a 16-game match. In the third cycle the defending champion would join the round of quarter-final players and, to retain the title, would have to win three matches. This plan, including such details as the time-controls, tiebreaks and number of games, would have to be approved by a steering committee of grandmasters, as well as FIDE, but this design would be the one that was most likely to be adopted. Vishy was very favorable to these plans for the future cycles.

He was more than curious about one point: did both Kasparov and Kramnik really agree to these concessions? That they wouldn't receive an automatic seeding into a championship final match? Yes, they had agreed. These were huge concessions! Vishy felt that with such concessions agreed, a Classical Chess world championship cycle would, once again, become a crown jewel in the chess world. And what about draw-odds? They were out. Permanently. This new cycle was definitely more of a sporting cycle than the old traditional ones. We also spoke about new annual Rapid Chess and Blitz Chess championships, and Vishy was quite happy with these new, separate lines of champions. It would be a great step forward for professional chess. Who would become the first "Triple-Chess-Crown winner?" We also spoke of the need to protect the existing major Classical Chess tournaments and to create a calendar that extended well into the future. We had to prevent the current chess wars from continuing.

Satisfied that we had had a good exchange of views, we wished one another well in the tournament and said our goodnights. While I regretted Vishy's refusal to play in Dortmund, I respected his decision.

Eurotel Trophy Tournament Begins

The big talk of the day was that a man had been arrested for scalping tickets to the games. This put all the players in a good mood. There is nothing quite as wonderful as playing to a packed house. The players feel it as a call to do their best, and for the Eurotel tournament Serge and crew put on a truly magnificent event. Eurotel President Terrence Valeski was radiant. The tournament boasted 30 registered foreign journalists, as well as TV and local press. Folks, it doesn't get any better than this.

For this day, my world focused in a new direction, the 64-squared board. My chess was definitely rusty, but in the first game things went well enough. I equalized easily, and Boris Gelfand offered a draw in an even position. Great! Now it was my turn with the White pieces! Ha! Well, the great plans of mice and men got a setback in the second game. I liked my position until I came up with an atrocious plan of Bf1-d3-h7, completely misplacing a good defensive piece. Boris played in excellent style and wiped me off the board. Rats!

At this point in my narrative I will turn my attention away from the Eurotel tournament and back to the unity process.

Grandmaster Voices

In my view, one of the great tragedies about the professional chess world is the almost complete lack of input by grandmasters to their sport. After the days of the Grandmasters Association, professional players have seemed content to leave it up to the FIDE General Assembly to change the rules. Isolated voices of protest are politely ignored, and life goes on. One of the enormous benefits of the Eurotel tournament is that as, one by one, the players were knocked out of the event they were free to discuss the peace plan, possible options and the future of chess, all in a wonderfully relaxed atmosphere. The conversations were lively and free flowing. It was an extraordinarily rare opportunity, and I was grateful for it. The players who showed their concerns by participating in these late-night discussions also enjoyed the opportunity to speak with their colleagues.

One particular complaint seemed to be a common denominator for everyone: Time-controls. Nigel Short told me that in his last four, or maybe five, events there had been a different time-control used in each! Boris Gelfand was a harsh critic of the new FIDE time-control of “four-hour” chess. Everyone that I spoke with had the same view: organizers should be free to make any time-control they wish for their events. However, professional players should support three, and only three, time-controls: Classical Chess (or seven-hour games), Rapid Chess and Blitz Chess.

Discussions focused on the time-control for the Eurotel tournament. The matches were “Rapid Chess”, but no one had any experience with this time-control! As is common with Rapid Chess, the players started the game with 25 minutes each, but, instead of receiving a “bonus time increment of ten seconds per move”, which is common for Rapid Chess, the Eurotel event featured a “Bronstein Delay” method of five seconds per move. That means that after a player’s clock has been started, it doesn’t begin ticking for five seconds. If a player moves before the five seconds have elapsed, no delay-time is “accrued” for the next move. A player either utilizes the delay feature or does not. Both Anand and Ivanchuk’s second asked me to explain to them the new time-control. I think they were the most honest, and in truth no one had a clear idea of the time-control, owing to lack of experience. In my match with Boris Gelfand, for instance, I counted five seconds for my first two moves in order to be sure that my clock was correctly set, but Boris bashed out his opening moves so quickly that I couldn’t be sure that his side was correctly set!

Neither was the “Rapid Chess” aspect of the Eurotel tournament the only time-control that was questioned. The “Blitz Chess” tiebreaker featured five minutes per player plus a two-second-bonus increment. Compare this with the FIDE Rapid Chess Grand Prix blitz tiebreaker, where each player began with five minutes plus a ten-second increment. And what about “Classical Chess”, or seven-hour chess itself? What should be the time-control for this form of chess? Is 40 moves in two hours, followed by 20 moves in one hour, followed by 30 minutes for the rest of the game, the very best time-control? Discussions focused on the third time-control, with a preference expressed for 15 minutes per player plus a thirty-second bonus increment. The increment method was preferred, as this would avoid any possible interference by the arbiter in the case of certain positions.

One thing that was universally agreed upon: A proper Grandmaster Committee had to be put in place to resolve these questions for professional players, and the sooner the better.

Formats For Unity

By far the most interesting discussion topic, and the one that generated the most creative concepts, was the unity plan for the first cycle. The Einstein TV proposal that had been published was a catalyst for a number of solutions. I couldn’t possibly list all the plans that were floated. Instead, I’ll just focus upon the three that received the most consideration.

Quadrangular

In this plan, four players would be seeded: Ponomarev, Kasparov, Ivanchuk and Anand. They would play four games against each other (i.e. 12 rounds of play), and the victor would be the FIDE representative against the winner of the match between Kramnik and the top-finisher in the Dortmund tournament.

Seeded Eight

This idea was twice as inclusive. Eight players would be seeded: the four mentioned in the “Quadrangular” idea and four others, three of whom would be Svidler, as the previous FIDE semi-finalist, and Khalifman and Karpov as former FIDE Champions. Should the eighth player be the next highest rated player missing from both cycles or should it be Judit Polgar, as the highest rated woman player? Such a field would make for a very interesting event. The “Seeded Eight” would play a double round robin.

Seeded Four Plus Qualifier

Finally, the third attractive plan was to have a world qualification tournament with four players joining the same four players seeded into the “Quadrangular.” The eight players would then contest a double round robin tournament.

Again, there were other plans floated, but these were the three that were discussed the most. Quick! Make your choice. Which one would you prefer? If you read further you’ll see the criticisms regarding these plans, so find the one you like best.

Problems with all Plans

Each plan presented above has its drawbacks. One way of looking at the “Quadrangular” was that the highest-rated players not in the Dortmund cycle were now in the cycle. The twelve highest rated players in the world, in fact. Another point of view is that three of the four players had competed in the 2001/2002 FIDE semi-final and final matches. In this case, Kasparov had replaced the other semi-final player, Peter Svidler. Was it fair to exclude Peter? If so, why? The sentiment seemed to be that the “Seeded Eight” format was more inclusive and fair.

Better yet was the “Seeded Four Plus Qualifier” format. Now we were getting back to “A Fresh Start”, and this plan seemed to garner the most support. One question posed was whether, for the world qualifier, the seven players from Dortmund who didn’t win there would also be eligible. My view was, why not? Let them play. A counter-view was that they would already have had one chance in Dortmund, and why should they receive a second opportunity? Discussions were lively.

The one clear fault with all of these plans was the position of Ruslan Ponomarev. Whether participating in a quadrangular or a round robin, wasn’t his position as FIDE World Champion being demoted? After all, he is the official World Champion. Participating in a qualifier to play against the Kramnik Dortmund winner didn’t do justice to his status. For instance, in the “Seeded Eight” player plan, he would be facing players whom he had defeated in the semi-final and final matches. Why should he have to do that? Shouldn’t Ponomarev be placed in the same advantageous position as Kramnik? Let others play a quadrangular, a round robin of eight seeds, and the winner would challenge him!

Fixing the Agenda

I presented all of these plans to Bessel, setting out the corresponding advantages and drawbacks. We needed to fix the agenda so that the meeting didn’t descend into a chorus of voices and votes. Bessel was a careful listener and surprised me with an altogether different counter-argument: “The sides have to be balanced. On Kramnik’s side there is a Dortmund event and a subsequent match. If we make an eight-player qualifier for the FIDE side, we know Garry won’t play. He already deserves a direct re-match, so that is out. As I see it, there really are only two choices: Either we go back to your original proposal, “A Fresh Start”, in which case Kramnik is out, or we have to support the matches as our only solution.” It was a very tough decision, but it was also clear that the only way to obtain complete unity was with the plan for two matches. The agenda was thus fixed.

It has taken me a while to write this account of the events before and in Prague. The time has given me the benefit of reading, in particular, two sets of post-Prague impressions, one from Alexey Shirov and one from Anatoly Karpov. Alexey explains that he had sent a fax to Bessel supporting a grand 16-player round robin event to decide the championship title. Bessel had shared this fax with me; this plan was unworkable because of Kramnik’s contract with Einstein TV. Karpov’s plan was a triangular event between Ponomarev, Kramnik and Kasparov, the simplest idea of all. Yet again, Kramnik’s contract forbade such a solution. Kramnik’s position was fixed in contractual stone. He had to play a match and, if he was successful, there could be a voluntary second match.

This wasn’t the first or the last time that Bessel and I were tripped up by Kramnik’s contract. It was annoying always to be presented with this obstacle, and the thought of simply supporting “A Fresh Start” was tempting. But such a course would be a total failure of what we all wanted: complete unity. We wished to make that our primary goal, and if it meant that we would be criticized, we would have to suffer the consequences. Complete unity opened the doors to commercial sponsors. Partial unity only insured the continuation of all the existing rivalry and chaos of the day. We had to bite the bullet and fix the agenda with a single plan for complete unity. It was crunch-time, and Bessel made it easier for me: “Yasser, if the players ask, this was my decision.”

At this point, I would like to interrupt my narrative. Readers may not like “A Fresh Start” or the plans presented, or even the arguments for and against them, but this presentation fairly explains what plans were discussed and why they were ultimately rejected. We weren’t wasting our time in Prague and we were all actively searching for complete unity. If we didn’t achieve complete unity, the future of chess would be uncertain. Conversely, complete unity would put the future of chess on a positive road to recovery.

One thing I truly wanted to know was why Einstein TV’s proposal had been published shortly before our peace conference. (There would be a logical explanation and Steve and Carsten would reveal all.) But for an agreement to be concluded in Prague lots of arrangements were still needed. The players were still discussing everything in groups. Tension was growing. The date of the long-awaited conference was approaching fast, and it was realized that almost anything was still possible. The best or the worst. An historic agreement or an ignominious debacle.

END OF PART 2

Remembering Richard, Part III

Richard the Teacher

By Tim Redman

Although I moved to Lima, Ohio in the summer of 1985, I stayed in contact with my Chicago friends. I could reach the city in five hours by car and so I visited several times a year. I would see Richard and the Warrens whenever I was in town, and Richard also came to Lima. We also continued to have our customary marathon phone conversations about once a month. Still, my account of these years of Richard's life is less detailed.

His Play

Richard continued to play in a desultory manner though he maintained his senior master rating. Gene Martinowsky wrote on the back of the photo in the last ICB, taken in 1987: "To Richard, still the strongest player in Chicago." The two of them were frequent sparring partners in endless series of five-minute games, with Richard winning about 60% of them. New players and the return of Greg DeFotis dropped him a bit: in the September-October 1992 issue of the ICB he was listed as the fourth highest-rated player in the state at 2427, behind Dimitry Gurevich, Vivek Rao, and Greg.

Richard was a proponent of rather off-beat opening lines for Black. Against 1. e4, he played the Gurgenzidze and the Sicilian Kelly Variation. Richard wrote a monograph on the latter opening, which was published in 1997. Against 1. d4 he favored the Benoni. For White he usually played 1. c4 or 1. e4. I played countless five-minute games against him during our visits, losing the overwhelming majority. Even near the end of his life, his chess skill remained undiminished.

His Friends

His apartment on Cornelia was the site of numerous lively social gatherings. Richard had the widest diversity of friends of anyone I have ever known. You could meet anyone at his parties: actors, executives, ministers, lawyers as well as folks $20 away from being homeless. He was generous to his friends, perhaps overly so. For example, Richard believed his friend Baron could get a job if he would only get a normal haircut. Baron didn't like the idea, so Richard offered him money. Baron finally agreed to go to the barber for $600. Richard loved the great variety of ethnic restaurants in Chicago and would pick up the check for friends quite often. For him, money was to be spent and enjoyed.

Other close friends included David Oshana, a chess expert who got around the North side on a unicycle, and Gordon Dunham, both expert players. Gordon left a promising career as an actuary at CNA, to the complete bafflement of Wiley Clements, "to drop out, tune in, turn on" in the parlance of the '70s. He grew his hair long and had a luxuriant beard. When I remarked one day that the beard hid his face, he replied: "This is my face. You scrape yours off each morning and wash it down the sink." Richard delighted in his friends, in their company, and in their conversation.

Richard's closest friend in the '90s was Craig Maher. An unpretentious, friendly, and easy-going young man with bad teeth, Craig worked as a security guard at Truman College. He and Richard visited me at my new house in Plano, coming to Texas on Amtrak which was four hours late in arriving at Dallas's Union Station. Shortly after they left, Richard called me with bad news. Craig had discovered that the woman he had been living with for six months was an intravenous drug user; she had been hiding it, but he found works under their bed. Craig tested positive for HIV and contracted AIDS. For the last years of Craig's life, Richard, Ziggy, another of Craig's friends, and Craig's mother shared responsibility for Craig's care. Richard's actions were selfless to a fault. Though wholly admirable, Richard's care for Craig came at a cost: he was neglecting his own health.

Richard's Health

Over the years, Richard's weight took its toll. He could carry even two hundred extra pounds in his thirties, but in his forties the effort became noticeable. Stairs were difficult, getting out of a chair was difficult, even getting dressed was difficult. I asked him at the time: "Why don't you diet? Do you hate life so much?" He responded: "Yes." My mother, who liked Richard a great deal, observed early on: "He's digging his grave with his spoon."

Type II diabetes is an insidious disease. By the time symptoms appear, damage to the nervous and vascular system has already been done. Dr. Martinowsky referred Richard to the most prominent diabetes specialist in the western suburbs. Richard followed his advice half-heartedly; losing weight was difficult. He started monitoring his blood sugar and taking insulin. We were roommates at the U.S. Open in Alexandria in 1996, and I was shocked to see the decline. His hands were palsied and he read with the aid of an illuminated magnifying glass. He had heart surgery and was in a nursing home on state aid for several months. Several toes were amputated. Richard liked Gene Martinowsky's joke: "You've lost a couple of pawns, but the position is still sound." Richard struggled against the disease, but his body was failing him. His mind remained sound to the end.

A mutual friend, Jim Palka, remarked on his passing: "He was bright. As bright as the sun."

Money

Richard's parents on their retirement had given him and his brother and sister each a sixth of their estate; a friend of that time, Penelope Mesic, remarked that they had either given him too much money or not enough. When his mother died, he received more money, as he did again when his father died. In the '80s he tried to master the intricacies of the stock market, reading voraciously and trading on sometimes a daily basis, but he lost most of his money. In the later '90s, he befriended a broker who churned his account, and he lost everything.

Another friend, Jimmy, an ex-con, convinced Richard that fine gold watches were sometimes being sold at less than their "melt weight," less than what the gold would get if the watch was melted down. So for six months they drove all over the Midwest buying watches that met Jimmy's criteria. Richard convinced some of his chess friends to invest in the enterprise. I and others warned him that the scheme was foolish, but he trusted Jimmy. What Richard and the rest of us didn't know was that the gold used in watches is not of the same grade as pure gold. They got most of the watches out of the safe deposit box one day to catalog them. Richard left to teach a chess lesson and when he returned, predictably, Jimmy and the watches were gone.

Teacher

Although Richard was making some money as a driver, he started to supplement his income by giving chess lessons. He worked with Tom Larson's successful chess program (begun in 1986) at Orr High School on the Westside. In 1989 his friend Norbert Leopoldi hired him to teach chess every week at a Park District fieldhouse at Western and Irving Park Road. Richard also taught for the innovative Warren Junior Chess Program, which had begun in academic year 1992-93. He was the first recipient of their Billy Colias Award for excellence in chess teaching. Richard helped organize Mayor Richard M. Daley's City-Wide Chess Tournament. The event's preliminary round was held July 27, 1992 at twelve locations throughout Chicago. It was open to youth ages 10-17, divided into two sections, 10-13 and 14-17. Lunch was provided for the players. Richard directed the final competition, at Preston Bradley Hall in the Cultural Center downtown. The Chicago Tribune reported on the event on August 7: "sponsored by the Department of Human Services' youth delinquency division [the tournament aims] to keep the city's youth occupied during summer vacation." Richard was described as a "two-time state chess champion" and chess teacher at Orr High School.

Richard had a series of apartments after moving out of the LaSalle Hotel: at 1936 North Clark, on Cornelia, then a fairly run-down place near the Chicago Chess Club in Rogers Park, then a nice apartment in West Rogers Park. In 1992, Jim Oberweis offered Richard a job teaching chess in Aurora, and he moved west. Out there he organized the 1994 Illinois State All-Grades Championship on Saturday, October 29 at Waubensee High School. Richard's last major accomplishment as a chess promoter was working with Chicago Public Schools Chess Coordinator Tom Larson to bring Grandmaster Maurice Ashley to Chicago in the fall of 1999. The trip was sponsored by the Chicago Board of Education to kick off its new chess program that culminated April 19, 2000 with a tournament for the top Chicago Public Schools high-school juniors and seniors. A $10,000 scholarship donated by the David McDonald Foundation was given to the winner, Tam Nguyen, Richard's most talented chess student, of whom he was very proud.

Richard's last apartment was at 10 South Oak in Westmont close to the Burlington train station and downtown Lemont and a Chinese restaurant he liked. I would see him whenever I was in town, about twice a year. We would visit, play speed chess, and I'd take him to the Chinese restaurant. We had dinner with the Warrens shortly before Christmas of 2000 at their favorite restaurant, Banlieu. Richard's sister and brother-in-law, Marianne and Jim Clifford, moved from Kansas City and bought a condo in nearby Hinsdale, which made him very happy. They and his brother John, a retired Chicago policeman, helped take care of him during his last years. A steady stream of chess students came for lessons, but his most frequent (daily) visitor was a nurse who came to check his blood sugar levels and change the dressing on a wound on his foot that would not heal. She became fond of Richard and attended his memorial service.

I talked to Richard shortly before I left for the U.S Open in Framingham, August 2001. He didn't sound good, and said: "If you want to see me, you better get up here." Since as USCF President I had to attend the meeting, I promised I would call him as soon as I returned. I did, and he seemed in much better spirits, much his old self, full of gossip and news about reactions to the Delegates' meeting taken from phone conversations with Don Schultz and others. In September, Helen Warren called me and said that Richard was in the hospital and things did not look good. I spoke with his sister, Marianne Clifford, and planned my trip.

I flew to Chicago on September 24 and visited Richard at Good Samaritan Hospital in Downers Grove. He was in the intensive care unit, in a private room because he had also contracted c. diff. Marianne Clifford, his sister, had arranged ahead of time that, though not a family member, I was to be allowed to visit. I put on the required gown and mask and went into the room. Marianne joined me shortly thereafter. Richard was in bad shape. He was on a respirator and though he was alert and we talked, he was clearly tired.

A few days later, I learned from Marianne that he had been transferred to Vencor in Northlake, a hospital specializing in weaning patients from their respirators -- not easy after a few weeks. Richard was in much better spirits. He had charmed all of the nurses, doctors, and attendants. He was not allowed to have water, but only to slowly crunch on shaved ice in limited quantities. Nonetheless, he managed to get glass after glass of ice. When I arrived he told me, brandishing the empty plastic cup: "Get me more ice. And tell them to put brandy in it this time!" I went to the nurses' station and they gave him more ice, despite orders. Richard's brother, John, arrived, and we had a nice conversation. I left that day optimistic that he would recover. Leaving, I told him that I would return at Christmas and I expected him to be out of bed by then.

Back in Texas, I learned from Marianne in mid-December that Richard had passed. The attempts to take him off the respirator were unsuccessful: he experienced drowning sensations and would panic. Faced with spending the rest of his life in a nursing home on a respirator, Richard made the last and best chess move of his life. He gave clear instructions that he should be placed on a morphine drip, and that when he was under, the respirator was to be turned off. Marianne had the strength and love to make sure that, despite initial objections from the hospital staff, Richard's wishes were carried out. With Marianne, her husband Jim, and Richard's brother John at his bedside, the morphine was started. Among Richard's last words: "Tell my friends that I love them." He died peacefully an hour later, on December 10, 2001.

Chess From the Middle Chess the Easy Way

By Ron Saurez

I hope this late summer edition finds you doing well in chess and life. I came across something the other day that I thought you might find interesting. I have found a philosophy to a sport that could be applied to chess.

My daughter decided to learn how to play tennis earlier this summer. When I was young, I played quite a bit of tennis and drifted away from it while in professional school, as there was no good opportunity to find people to play with as well as the time to play. Other activities caught my interest over the years, including chess, and I just didn't get active in the sport again. When my wife mentioned that my daughter was interested in taking lessons and learning the sport, I decided that it would be fun to get back into it as exercise (running has become tedious for me over the years).

I should take a moment to mention that my daughter was given more than ample opportunities to play chess as she has grown. I ran a chess club and gave lessons to groups of children on several occasions. My daughter would participate with her friends but just wasn't interested in carrying on with the game as her own activity of choice. She delved in piano, ballet, art (in various media) and many other things, but chess just hasn't been her "cup of tea". Many activities like chess give the opportunity to learn skills in living and functioning with others and in our world. I have always been willing for her to participate and learn what she can to apply to life. So, now tennis it is.

I found quite a number of Internet sites that dealt with tennis and how to play. Boy, this seems like chess in that regard. Most of them promote the same standard fundamentals that are recognized as the "way" to play tennis correctly. Now, of course most chess sites that "teach" chess profess the same basic fundamentals as the correct way to go about playing the game too. I bet that other activities like bridge, croquet and bowling also have many internet sites teaching the agreed upon way to play their activity best too. I think we might be on to something here.

I found one tennis site that promoted "effortless" tennis. All right, now I want you to know that I am ready for the "effortless" chess way. I do remember a book written by Reuben Fine in which the title said something about playing chess the "easy way". Let's see, "effortless", "easy" seems the same to me! By golly, this should work.

This tennis program talked of learning tennis in an effortless way. Its program is laid out in a very detailed manner. There will be no competition of any sort for at least two years. Seems extreme, doesn't it? The thought is that if you start playing a game, and trying to win, you will not be natural or relaxed and will develop bad habits. Instead of playing games and having fun like normal people, the dude that came up with this idea has exact drills planned to keep the neophyte busy. Of course these drills are really boring. According to this guy, by getting the basic skills down solidly, when the individual starts playing the actual game it will be effortless to win. Excuse me, but if you play at tennis for two whole years and never play a game, won't the idea of playing a game seem quite foreign when you are supposed to play? But hey, who am I to criticize some dude that is obviously more of an expert than I am? All right, I am wrong and he is right. Let's take this same philosophy and apply it to chess.

Here, my friends, is an introduction to the new and improved way to learn chess the easy and effortless way:

1. Never play an actual chess game, even casually, for at least two years. The urge to win will contort your style of play to unnatural and incorrect ways.
2. For the first month all you will do is practice pawn moves. In the first week you will only practice moving the pawn forward one square at a time for one hour a day. The second week will include drills moving either two squares on the first move and/or one square on that and any other moves. Confused yet? The next two weeks will include the occasional capture on the diagonal, but without any competitive tone lest your nature be contaminated.
3. We will pick up the pace quite a bit in the next month. You will spend one hour a day moving the rooks and bishops on the board, for a month.
4. In the third month you will practice knight moves, only.

5. The fourth month will be dedicated to the Queen and how it moves. So as not to confuse you, in the first week you will practice moving the Queen only one square at a time. Your moving the Queen horizontally and vertically any number of squares will occupy the second week. I know, this is advanced, but you can handle it. The third week will deal with those tricky Queen diagonal moves. And, the fourth week will be a culmination of your actually moving the Queen in any direction any number of squares. Remember, this is always to be done for one hour a day.

All right, I think you get the idea. For those of you interested in the rest of this highly detailed and “easy, effortless” way to learn how to play chess, I will be happy to sell the program to you for a mere three thousand dollars.

Seriously, what I have gotten from my Middle view of the learning of any activity like chess, music, tennis, bowling or the like is that there are two distinct ways to go about it. The first is to be immensely talented at the activity where a little bit of effort goes a long way and yields phenomenal results with little effort. If you can't manage that, then I guess you will learn the fundamentals from that vast body of knowledge that has been built by others before you. Once you have those fundamentals mastered, then your own bent and flair can show itself.

Doesn't it seem silly to withhold from playing the games you are learning? What about having fun? I know that a lot of chess teachers say playing blitz is not good for your chess. On the other hand others say it helps learn the openings if used correctly. The great chess players seem to become great whether they played blitz or not. I don't think it really matters. Sometimes we can get too involved in the mechanics of learning an activity and thereby lose sight of what we are really there for. I suggest you learn, play, win, lose and learn some more. If along the way you enjoy yourself, that's all the better for you my friend.

The Master Challenge

by Vince Hart

On July 12-15, the Master Challenge at Elmhurst College drew 138 players including two Grandmasters and three International Masters. The tournament was co-sponsored by the St. Charles Chess Club and the Elmhurst Chess Club and was smoothly directed by Roger Birkeland, Jeff Wiewel and Blair Machaj. As in the past, accelerated pairings were used, and in order to further increase the odds that the top prizes would be decided between the top players in the final rounds, this year's tournament was lengthened from five to six rounds.

Accelerated pairings are a useful tool for dealing with the problem of a tournament that is too short to produce a single winner. A six round tournament like the Master Challenge can only guarantee one clear winner if the size of the field is sixty-four or fewer. Accelerated pairings create the effect of adding an extra round to a tournament by pairing the first two rounds as if the top half of the field started with an extra point. As a result, the top quarter of the field plays the second quarter in the first round instead of the third quarter of the field as it would under normal pairings. In the second round, the losers from the top half play the winners from the lower half while the top half winners face one another and the lower half losers face one another. If all goes according to plan (i.e., ratings), no more than one eighth of the field will have perfect scores after the second round under accelerated pairings while up to a quarter of the field might still have perfect scores under normal Swiss pairing rules. Subsequent rounds are paired normally. Apparently, the accelerated pairings also confused Blair's computer causing it to crash several times leading to some slight delays.

The accelerated pairings worked quite well as the only perfect scores going into the fifth round were Grandmasters Pavel Blatny and Alek Wojtkiewicz. Blatny had handicapped himself somewhat by an earlier decision to take a bye in the sixth round. Thus he needed a win with the white pieces against his fellow GM in order to guarantee himself a share of first prize. Looking to unbalance the position from the first move, Blatny played Bird's Opening. Many observers felt that Blatny had the early advantage, but he overreached in trying to squeeze the full point out of the position and Wojtkiewicz ended up with the win. He was however unable to retain sole possession of first place as he yielded a draw in the last round to IM Angelo Young to finish 5.5-.5.

The GM's last round draw allowed local phenom Zhe Quan to share first place. Quan was perfect at the board ceding his only half point to a fourth round bye. His impressive performance included wins in the last two rounds over IMs Dominik Pedzich and Osman Palos. IM Young, FM Albert Chow and Aleksandra Stamanov with scores of 5-1 shared third place. Best U2000 was Jason Duncan with 4.5-1.5. Darwin Nyeberg, Ben Wallenberg, Kevin Potts and Rudy Padilla tied for U1800 with 4-2.

Two of the most impressive performances came from the U1600 and U1400 winners. In taking the U1600 prize, Isaiah Pettye's 4-2 score placed him ahead of fifty-six higher rated players including the expert he beat in a 600 point upset. Tristan Lang leapfrogged fifty-two players to take U1400 honors by pulling off a 500 point upset and following it with a draw at the same differential (which I no longer feel so bad about giving up). Gerog Gerolimatos, Brandon Hammothe, Eric Heiser and Nick Darschewski shared U1200 at 2.5-3.5.

2002 Denker Qualifier and Illinois Invitational HS Championship

By Kevin Bachler, games by AI Chow

The 2002 Denker Qualifier held April 19-21 was a hard fought tournament, which came down to the wire. In the end, William Aramil and Robert Riddle tied for first, both coming back from first round losses. Matt Cohn-Geier, the lowest rated player who had tied for 1st in the Illinois Individual High School Championship in a surprising result, jumped out in this event, winning his first two games. Richard Martin and Andrey Gorlin were also in the thick of things. Dan Leung got a nice start with a win against Aramil, but a loss to Cohn-Geier and a loss to Gorlin ended his shot.

The tournament was missing two-time champion Yelena Gorlin, who elected to miss the event. A few players who qualified for the event failed to make it in because they returned their applications too late. This tournament is THE most prestigious tournament in Illinois High School Chess, and it is run with a tightly.

Several key games occurred in the last two rounds. Round 4 saw Riddle as Black face Cohn-Geier in a hard fought game where Cohn-Geier had the opening booked – and Riddle kept finding the good ideas over the board. Riddle eventually won an amazing game featuring a King march and tripled pawns.

Meanwhile, Andrey Gorlin defeated Richard Martin III in an equal endgame when Martin slipped and walked into a mating net, while Aramil defeated Chen.

This set up key match-ups on boards 1-2 in the last round, with Riddle white against Martin, and Aramil as white against Gorlin. Aramil surprisingly got a strong attack right out of the opening, leading to a crushing win. Riddle in a KIA sacrificed on the Kingside, causing Martin to sacrifice and exchange to halt the attack. Riddle eventually won the resulting endgame to pull into a tie for first.

The two players share the title of Illinois Invitational HS Champion, but needed to play a playoff match to determine the Illinois representative to the Denker Tournament of Champions.

On May 11, Riddle and Aramil had their 2-game playoff. Aramil won the first hard-fought battle. In the second game, Riddle came out of the opening with a winning advantage. However, one slip gave Aramil a chance to be only slightly inferior with a relatively easy to play position, while Riddle's position was difficult. The game see-sawed for several moves, with Aramil eventually winning. He thereby became the Illinois representative to the Denker Tournament of Champions.

We hope that this tournament continues to provide Illinois top high school players with an opportunity to hone their skills. We are looking for a sponsor in 2003 to help share the tournament costs.

Blair Machaj served as TD at the Denker Qualifier, while Larry Cohen was the TD for the playoff match.

We thank Maine South High School for hosting both events.

IM Pedzich wins 2002 Normal, IL May Open;

National Master Szpisjak, Condron and Ramamoorthy tie for 2nd;

Grandmaster Joel Benjamin pays a short visit to the tournament.

By Dennis Bourgerie

International Master Dominik Pedzich (2343) from the Chicago area, defeated Sean Comerford (1360), Phil Jarrette (1801), Pete Karagianis (1869) and David Long (1830) to take undisputed first place with a 4-0 score.

Steve Szpisjak (2208) from the Chicago area, Jim Condron (1900) of Lisle, IL and Shankar Ramamoorthy (1530) from Bloomington, IL all scored 3.5-0.5 to tie for 2nd place.

Szpisjak defeated Dennis Bourgerie (1754), Suresh Kanniah (1729), drew with Jim Condron (1900) and won against Surya Kopula (1680) in the final round.

Condron defeated Jordan Jelinek (1127), Joe Ochiltree (1458), drew with Steve Szpisjak (2208) and won against Kevin French (1902) in round 4.

Ramamoorthy won against Mark Nibbelin (919), Pete Stein (2135), drew with Kevin French (1902) and won against Phil Jarrette (1801) in round 4.

The trophy winners were as follows:

1st Place: Dominik Pedzich;

Class A: Jim Condron;

Class B: Suresh Kanniah of Bloomington, IL, 3.0-1.0;

Class C: Shankar Ramamoorthy;

Class D: Earl Kennell of Roanoke, IL, 2.0-2.0;

Class E: Jerry Bennett of Decatur, IL, 2.0-2.0;

Under 1000: Josh Kim of Northbrook, IL, 2.0-2.0

Unrated: Aaron Hanson of Rantoul, IL, 1.0-3.0.

We had a pleasant surprise when Grandmaster Joel Benjamin stopped in for about an hour and visited with some of the players. Joel had been attending a conference on computers and writing at Illinois State University in Normal, IL.

I directed the 38 player, 4 round G/80 tournament held at the Fairfield Inn in Normal, Illinois.

Ramamoorthy, Shankar (1530 – Stein, Pete (2135) [B33]

Normal Open (2), 18.05.2002

Notes submitted by Pete Stein.

I've had some poor games in my illustrious career spanning nearly 30 years. This one is a heartbreaker because of all the crushers I missed; the very thing I aim for via my choice of openings. My oversights in no way detract from my opponent's enterprising play. As a 1530 many good things are in store for him as a class player.

1.e4 c5 2.Nf3 Nc6 3.d4 cxd4 4.Nxd4 Nf6 5.Nc3 e5 6.Ndb5 d6 7.Bg5 a6 8.Bxf6 gxf6 9.Na3 b5 10.Nd5 f5 11.Bd3 Be6 12.c4?! Rarely seen in top level play. [12.c3] 12...Qa5+! 13.Qd2? Kf1 seems to be the preferred choice according to GM Krasenkov, after which black has an easier time equalizing than in the more common main lines. 13...Qxd2+ 14.Kxd2 Bh6+ 15.Kd1 Bxd5?!

The State Farm Employee Chess Club News

By Colley Kitson

State Farm Employees Association (SFEA) Chess Club approved the Bylaws that follow in this article. Our club has existed for about five years without bylaws. In order to receive continued support from State Farm Employees Activities we were required to write our Bylaws.

I must admit I was not crazy about the prospect of trying to write our bylaws. I couldn't even tell you what they were before this. I must admit that now I would say it was very much worth the effort.

Article I. Name and Legal Status. The name of the organization is SFEA Chess Club. The SFEA Chess Club shall be an unincorporated association of its members.

Article II. Purpose. The SFEA Chess Club is dedicated to promoting the game of chess and chess play through the sponsorship of tournaments, exhibitions, lectures, and other related activities.

Article III. Membership and Voting.

Section 1. All SFEA members are eligible to join the SFEA Chess Club.

Section 2. The members of the SFEA Chess Club shall elect the Club's officers and directors annually at its regularly scheduled annual meeting.

Section 3. Any member may terminate his or her membership at any time.

Article IV. Program Year and Annual Meeting.

Section 1. The program year for the SFEA Chess Club shall run from January 1 to December 31.

Section 2. The annual meeting of the SFEA Chess Club shall be held on the third Tuesday in January of each year.

Section 3. The annual meeting of the SFEA Chess Club shall take place at a location reasonably accessible to the members as determined by the SFEA Chess Club's board of directors.

Section 4. Notice of the SFEA Chess Club's annual meeting and meeting location shall be sent to the Club members at least 7 days prior to the meeting via Email or other reasonable means.

Section 5. A quorum for the annual meeting shall consist of a majority of the Club's members present and voting.

Article V. Board of Directors and Officers.

Section 1. The officers of the SFEA Chess Club shall be the president, the vice-president, the secretary, and the treasurer.

Section 2. The board of directors of the SFEA Chess Club shall consist of the Club officers and two directors at large.

Section 3. The officers and directors shall be elected for annual terms of office at the SFEA Chess Club's annual meeting.

Section 4. Vacancies in the Club's board of directors occurring during a program year shall be filled through a vote of the Club's members at a duly noticed extraordinary meeting of the Club (as set out in Article VI, Section 7) or through a majority vote of the remaining directors. For a vote of the directors to take effect at least 3 directors must concur in the proposed choice or choices.

Section 5. Any officer or director of the SFEA Chess Club's board of directors may be removed from office by a vote of five or more directors or upon the written demand of two thirds or more of the Club's members.

Section 6. The officers and directors of the SFEA Chess Club shall disclose any actual or perceived conflicts of interest to the board of directors and shall refrain from taking any action where the remaining directors of the board deem that the directors or officers presenting a conflict of interest should be disqualified from taking action. Any identified conflict of interest shall be appropriately memorialized.

Article VI. Administration.

Section 1. The SFEA Chess Club's board of directors shall be authorized to take any action deemed appropriate consistent with these bylaws.

Section 2. The SFEA Chess Club's board of directors may affiliate the Club with the United States Chess Federation or other chess organizations.

Section 3. The SFEA Chess Club's board of directors may meet as frequently or infrequently as the board wishes. A simple majority of the directors present and voting at duly noticed board meetings shall be sufficient to bind the board. The board shall provide notice of its meetings and planned agendas to the Club's members as it deems appropriate. The board's meetings shall be open to the Club's members.

Section 4. The President or his or her designee shall give an account of the Club's activities at the Club's annual meeting.

Section 5. The Treasurer or his or her designee shall give an account of the Club's finances at the Club's annual meeting. The Club's financial affairs and other records (including membership rosters) shall be open to inspection by any member upon reasonable notice.

Section 6. The SFEA Chess Club's board of directors shall plan the Club's program year and endeavor (but not be required) to carry out two or more of the following activities during the program year: tournaments, exhibition matches, and tutorials.

Section 7. The SFEA Chess Club's board of directors shall call extraordinary meetings of the members for any input or action that may be desired. A quorum for these extraordinary meetings shall be at least two fifths of the members. Notice to the Club members of any extraordinary meeting and its planned location shall be given at least 7 days in advance of the meeting via Email or other reasonable means. The meeting shall be held at a location reasonably accessible to the Club's members.

Section 8. The SFEA Chess Club's board of directors shall assign one of the directors to act as a liaison with the State Farm Employees Association.

Section 9. The SFEA Chess Club is encouraged (but not required) to engage in joint activities with other organizations interested in the game of chess or in playing chess.

Section 10. The board of directors of the SFEA Chess Club shall set the membership dues for each program year. On a uniform basis applicable to all of the Club's members, the membership dues may be waived or adjusted during a program year as the board deems appropriate.

Section 11. The board of directors of the SFEA Chess Club shall be authorized to set reasonable fees for tournaments, special exhibitions, and other activities for those interested in participating. Members and non-members desiring to participate in these activities may be required to pay these added fees as a condition for their participation.

Section 12. Any dues and fees paid to the SFEA Chess Club shall be non-refundable unless the Club's board of directors directs otherwise.

Section 13. The SFEA Chess Club's board of directors shall be authorized to grant or issue prizes. The SFEA Chess Club and its members shall not engage in or tolerate any lotteries or wagering in their Club activities.

Section 14. As a matter of fiscal policy, the SFEA Chess Club's board of directors is encouraged to spend the anticipated revenues earned during each program year on activities carried out that year.

Section 15. The SFEA Chess Club's board of directors is authorized to purchase and maintain equipment suited to its activities. The board shall designate a custodian or custodians from among the directors or members for any Club property. An inventory of the Club's property and its estimated value shall be distributed to the members at the Club's annual meeting.

Article VII. Amendments and Dissolution.

Section 1. The SFEA Chess Club bylaws may be amended by a vote of three fourths of the members present and voting at one of its annual meetings or at an extraordinary meeting that the board may set for the Club members as indicated in Article VI, Section 7. Notice of any proposed amendment to the Club's bylaws shall be furnished to the members at least 30 days in advance of the meeting.

Section 2. The SFEA Chess Club shall continue in existence indefinitely.

Section 3. The SFEA Chess Club may disband upon the vote of three fourths of its members.

Section 4. If the SFEA Chess Club were to disband, then its tangible property shall be liquidated on reasonable terms. Any funds left over in the Club's treasury shall be paid over to the State Farm Employees Association for support of its activities. Jrg 8/18/02

Hernandez, Cao Split First Place

Thirty chess players attended the tournament on June 8. First place in the tournament was shared by Hector Hernandez, of Chicago, and Shimin Cao, of Chesterfield, Mo., each of whom scored 3.5 points. Taking the A-B prize was Richard Kujoth, of Jacksonville, with 3 points.

The C-D prize was split three ways, by John Dueker, of Lockport; Jonathan Hoffsuemmer, of Springfield; and Michael Chu, hometown unknown. They each scored 3 points. Andrew Barfield, of Mt. Sterling, took the E prize with 2.5 points. Finally, in his first tournament, Brian Creasey, of Springfield, scored 2 points and took home the unrated prize.

Complete results from the tournament are on page 4.

Membership, Attendance Up

Membership has increased to 35, with the addition of two new members, Spencer Harris and James Ruth, both of Springfield. We have also got a few (very) late renewals. Average attendance at club meetings is also up slightly, after several months of decline. Keep it up!

Minor Event News

Lectures Removed From Schedule

It was decided at the special meeting of June 12 that, because of lack of interest, the lecture series would be removed from the organized minor event schedule. The lecture series is not being entirely canceled; it will still be available if anyone has a lecture to give. See Leptoman to schedule a lecture, if possible for the last Wednesday of any month.

Also at the meeting, the plan to hold a summer non-chess event of some sort, such as a club barbecue, failed.

Current Minor Event Schedule

Springfieldians David Long, Jonathan Hoffsuemmer, and James Ruth went to the Peoria tournament on June 29, where David scored 3.5 points, Jonathan scored 2 points, and James scored 1 point.

Absurdity, Part 6 : Newtonian Chess

In Newtonian chess, when any piece (except a knight) moves and stops where the next square on the line in which it was moving (even if the piece cannot legally go there) is occupied, it transfers its momentum to the piece on said square, which then moves in the same direction until it hits an obstruction (another piece), when it stops on the last vacant square before the obstruction. Examples: Playing a pawn from e2 to e4 knocks backward anything on e5; if the pawn later takes on d5, whatever is on c6 will start moving northwest. Normally the edge of the board will also stop a moving piece, but when the Columbus Rule is in effect, such a piece just falls off the edge of the world.

The SCC meets Wednesday nights, 6 to 10 p.m., at the American Legion Post 32, between 5th and 6th Streets, half a block south of Capitol Ave., downtown. On the first Wednesday of every month, and once in a while other Wednesdays, we meet in a room upstairs instead of our usual room on the west side of the building.

St. Charles Chess Club News

By Dan Pradt

June 13 Our second theme night was the Ruy: 1.e4,e4; 2.Nf3,Nc6; 3.Bb5...That opening for which "No defense seems quite good enough, no attacking method seems quite the best."(Napier).A good opening for those who just want to play chess-but Black can get into trouble without some preparation. Perhaps because of this, White prevailed 13-8.

July 11 GM Alex Wojkiewicz gave a simul. Although 20 people showed up, only 13 decided to play teh GM. This small but fiesty crowd scored two wins. Jeff Wiewel refuted Wojo's exchange sacrifice for a nice win, and Tim Ailes hung in the exchange down until the GM surprisingly hung a rook. Tyler Belding had a won endgame, which unfortunately did not win itself. Belding missed the win and then the draw,and was the last man to finish. Wojkiewicz quite courteously did not ask for blitz replies or clocks near the end.

July18 We held our game 15 Championship. New member James Fagan showed up to sample our strength. Fagan, whose quick rating(2114) is higher than his regular rating, breezed to a 5-0 score, winning all his games quickly and decisively. The last two rounds were wins over Jason Duncan(1833) and Ray Satterlee(1833). Duncan, Ralph Mc Graw(1661), and Tyler Belding(1377) came in at 4-1.

August 8 GM and U.S. champion Larry Christensen gave a simul. The affable GM started out with a short, humorous lecture on the pitfalls of internet chess, assuring us among other info that NO, Bobby Fischer is not playing internet chess-a computer program beat Nigel Short. 19 players contested the GM, who finished with 18 wins and one draw-given to Charles Jennings.Jeff Wiewel and Marcus Stinson were the last to finish. After Jeff finally went down in a tough endgame, Marcus and Larry played some clock chess Marcus recieving time odds. Marcus, who had been the exchange up through much of the game, finally lost defending a bishop of opposite colors endgame.

GOLDIN IS PERFECT AT HEARTLAND SEMI-CLASS

By Tim Just

OPEN SECTION

Formula for a perfect Father's Day weekend: Five rounds plus GM Alexander Goldin equal five points. The GM chooses to essay the 2 day schedule (6/15-6/16) rather than the 3 day schedule (6/14-6/16) to score victories against Jeff Wiewel (2034), Igor Tsyganov (2198), Dominick Pedzich (2362), Aleksanda Stannov (2256), and Angelo Young (2381). Due to a less than an expected turnout of only 116 players, GM Goldin took home $430 of the first place based on first place prize in the Open section. Unfortunately, GM Goldin did not hand in his score sheets so that we could all share in his victories?!

A massive tie among the remaining place prize winners and the U2200 prize winners at 3.5-1.5 each netted Steve Szpisjak, A. J. Steigman (all the way from Florida!), Igor Tsyganov, Peter Linn, and Andrey Gorlin take home pay of $164 apiece. Fifth place saw Al Chow and Angelo Young score 3 points and split $60; while 3 points in the U2200 class gave $32.50 each to Zhe Quan, Miomir Stevanovic, Jeff Wiewel, and Krishna Sudharsan.

RESERVE SECTION

The U2000 section saw Jacobo Moreno (1871) all alone at the top with four victories (1614 Adam Nelson, 1673 Mark Engelen, 1804 Mike Bacon, and 1843 Arandel Markovic) and one draw (1953 Ashish Vaja). That score of 4.5-.5 was enough to claim the $430 first place prize.

The 4-1 scoring Dexter Cavitt, Ashish Vaja, and Mike Maloney claimed the second through fourth place money of $153.33 each. The fifth place prize of $56 was split among James Egerton, Leon Shernoff, Ely Sollano, and Boyd Reed by scoring 3.5-1.5 each. The U1800 prize of $230 went to 4 point scoring Danyul Lawrence. After carving up what was left of the U1800 prizes Suresh Kanniah, Vikram Sasi, and Patrick Lacey each received $86.67 for scoring 3.5 points.

BOOSTER SECTION

Rising star Der-Long Lin (1362) staked his claim on the $430 first place prize in the U1600 section by posting a faultless score of 5-0 against Justin Zelinski (1001), Brad Goral (1566), Gary Levine (1541), Dan Krepich (1480), and Mike Schmid (1483). Clear 2nd place of $260 was awarded to Adam Widelka for his 4.5-.5 efforts. William Blackman stood alone in third place with a 4-1 score to bring home $130. Every other prize winner score no less than 3.5 points. Brad Goral, Mike Schmid, Rick Jaconette, and Yize Leng all tied for 4th place and $17.50 each. $98 was the take home pay for the each of the woodpushers involved in the massive U1400 and U1200 tie between Tristan Lang, Kelly Floyd, Krishna Shankar, Pat Jones, and Eric Heiser.

Blair Machaj, Wayne Ckark, and Tim Just directed the event with help from Gary Jensen. Clark and Just also organized the tournament.
